

The Unobvious Dimensions and Unthinkable Consequences of the China-India Border Dispute

Dr. Antonina Luszczkiewicz
(Indiana University)

02/07, Tuesday, 12 pm
GA2067

*Light refreshment will be served before the talk

Bio: A Fulbright visiting scholar at the East Asian Studies Center of IU, Antonina Luszczkiewicz is an assistant professor at the Institute of the Middle and Far East and the founding director of the Taiwan Lab Research Center at the Jagiellonian University in Krakow, Poland. She is an expert on China-India relations and the United States, the image of Indians and Chinese in literature and film, and the Cold War history in the Asian context.

Abstract: Apart from the 1962 war, solving the seven-decade-long China-India border dispute has never seemed more unlikely. Why is it so hard for Beijing and New Delhi to find a peaceful solution to their territorial dispute? Will the growing nationalisms in both China and India push them to war? Dr. Antonina Luszczkiewicz, a Fulbright visiting scholar at the East Asian Studies Center, will discuss the less known aspects of the China-India border dispute and will present several scenarios of how the relations between Beijing and New Delhi may evolve over the next decade.

