HANDOUT: DELIBERATION VS. DEBATE

Deliberation

Debate*

Step Four: Deliberation p. 1

Deliberation is collaborative: the sides work together to formally discuss.	Debate is a type of fight: two sides oppose each other to prove each other wrong.
Deliberation builds a learning relationship between people.	Debate builds a competitive relationship between people.
Deliberation encourages the participants to identify questions and goals they could share.	Debate encourages each side to articulate its own questions and goals.
In a deliberation the goals are sharing ideas and considering new ideas.	In a debate the goal is winning with your own ideas.
In a deliberation all voices are valued and everyone contributes to solving a problem.	In a debate one person and viewpoint wins, the other is dismissed.
In a deliberation you believe that many solutions might exist, and that different people have parts of the best solutions.	In a debate you believe that there is one solution that you have it, and other solutions are not considered.
In a deliberation you listen to and are sensitive to each other's feelings, hopes, and ideas.	In a debate you do not care about the feelings, hopes and ideas of others.
In a deliberation you contribute your best ideas to be improved upon.	In a debate you contribute your ideas and defend them against challenges.
In a deliberation you listen to each other to understand and build knowledge for decision-making.	In a debate you listen to each other to find flaws and disagree with the other participants.
In a deliberation you search for the good parts of other people's ideas.	In a debate you search for weaknesses in others people's ideas.
In a deliberation you may consider new ideas and even change your mind completely i.e. the fifth option	In a debate you do not admit you are considering new ideas and you must not change your mind, or you lose.
Deliberation encourages you to evaluate yourself and your ideas.	Debate encourages you to criticize others and their ideas.
Deliberation is more likely to promote open- mindedness, including an openness to being wrong.	Debate creates a close-minded attitude, a determination to be right
Deliberation encourages you to see all sides of an issue.	Debate encourages you to see only two different sides of an issue.
Deliberation invites keeping the topic open even after the discussion formally ends.	Debate, by creating a winner and a loser, discourages further discussion.

^{*}Adapted from Boston Area Educators for Social Responsibility workshop handout, BAESR, Cambridge, MA, 1985.